Serious Games

Serious games enable the principle of teaching, training and awareness-raising in an entertaining way.
(vgl. Wong et al., 2007)

Learning

Game

Serious games include an educational component.
(vgl. Thom et al. 2012)

Serious Games ...

„ Serious Games is called

- a special form of e-learning, those using the perception from entertainment software development,
- which fosters competencies for the living environment and
- include them in authentic situations within the game,
- They create and maintain fun and motivation via intrinsic creativity elements and motivational elements.
- Moreover, they integrate such elements in a didactic-pedagogical context that is characterised by learning through learner activation as well as action and process-oriented learning.““

Potentials of Connecting Games to Learning

- „Computer games train the perfect workers of the future“
(Deterding 2007: 3, Original in German)
- To play game is essentially connected to learning processes“
(c.f. Kerres et al. 2009: 1 Original in German)
- Interaction increases the players' self-efficacy
(cf. Lampert et al. 2009: 12, Original in German)
- Increasing motivation by adaption of levels
(c.f. Vollbrecht 2008, Original in German)
- Repeatability leads to experience and differences in experience
(development processes)
(c.f. Corti 2006 Original in German)
